6. (Currently Amended) A medical device comprising:
an implantable structure;
a basecoat layer affixed to the implantable structure, the basecoat layer comprising a first polymeric material; trichostatin A, in thereapeutic dosages, releasably affixed to the implantable structure for the treatment of restenosis following vascular injury, the trichostatin A being incorporated into a the basecoat layer ~~polymeric material~~, the concentration of trichostatin A being less than 100 nano molar; rapamycin, in therapeutic dosages, releasably affixed to the implantable structure for the treatment of restenosis following vascular injury, the rapamycin being incorporated into the basecoat layer, ~~polymeric material~~ the rapamycin and the trichostatin A potentiating each others effectiveness; and a separate and distinct topcoat layer comprising a second polymeric material affixed to the basecoat ~~polymeric material layer~~ to control the elution rate of the trichostatin A and the rapamycin, the topcoat layer comprising the second polymeric material and the basecoat layer comprising the first polymeric material being immiscible polymeric materials, wherein the ~~basecoat~~ first polymeric material includes a copolymer ~~polyvinylidene fluoride-co-hexafluoropropylene~~ polyvinylidene fluoride-co-hexafluoropropylene ~~with a sixty/fifty weight ratio of VDF:HFP~~ and the ~~topcoat~~ second polymeric material comprises a ~~four hundred ninety microgram~~ poly(n-butylmethacrylate) layer, wherein the basecoat and the topcoat are affixed as separate and distinct layers upon each other ~~mixed and precipitated from solution to create a phase separation of two distinct layers.~~
